INDO-CHINA
the which contrasts refreshingly with the of in a French provincial town. The	) informality of life an Englishman, Cunningham/ who found its conventions a contrast with the English colonies, He the wives of prominent officials clothed in dressing-gowi»	, 1 the of Saigon, and even into the hotel The advent of Frenchwomen to the colonies has been the decisive in purveying bourgeois ideals thither. In the early days few well-bred Frenchwomen were willing to go to the colonies. Their the resumption of French social life, which introduced more grace and refinement into the colony, but which bourgeois conventions and — far more important — the off of their — from a simpler life in contact with the	1 Though there were some Frenchmen who fell so completely a prey to the Oriental charms of their that all their female	; well lost, the great majority found that too Inconveniences and, in addition, bred a certain It a current saying that the newcomers migh for a time to the erotic* but that it was only a question of time and	n they would prefer a middle-aged compatriot to the of women. Perhaps it was the of in women has made Frenchwomen so unfair to la every have tried to sever all connections IE Part of due to the novelty of  * as a permanent supply of domestic
Their by the Aonamites, many of to in where there was a FrenchwoEBam, .are of the women who gave up in Paris to their husbands to the and opium, at the sacrifice of fife aad « in wives who complicate to reproduce their former existence milby to the ruination of in to to the The tad who interests itt the culture, becomes rooted in lado-CMm, for France, after a Is to receive as mact is a ¥eif a £•* & A*, in m۵۵

418